It goes without saying that it is desirable that should be as nearly as possible a list of the persons actually holding the Company's stock. The Companies Ordinances indeed require that a list of the shareholders of every Company shall be lodged with the Registrar every year, but the lists sent in under present conditions contain the names of many persons whose interest in the resblank transfers. More especially is this so declared entirely to blame. in the case of non-dividend paying Companies, and when there are calls still due on one for the original vendor. In the recent the shares the matter becomes rather a serious collapse in the Hongkong share market, when several of the infant Companies were when several of the infant Companies were making calls which there was some difficulty in collecting, there were not a few cases in which men who had sold their shares were held liable and had to pay up because the purchaser had failed to register himself as would of course have a remedy against the purchaser if he thought it worth pursuing, but in the particular cases to which reference has been made the purchasers were for the most part men of straw from whom there was nothing to be obtained. Granting, however, that the remedy which sellers far as it goes, it is at the same time the this can to any extent be done by imposing transfers that policy ought to be adopted. It could not fail to have some effect, because although blank transfers would still be A. S. WATSON & CO., LIMITED, required where shares are deposited as security for loans, shares on which there is likely to be any difficulty in collecting further calls are not a class of securities that are readily accepted by the Banks, and the seller, having to take the documents out of his own safe, would naturally insist on having the transfer completed both for his own protection and in order to obtain the advantage of the lower rate of duty. The change Mr. Whitchead will also move the following would likewise bring a very large increase to the revenue if the present rate of duty were retained as the minimum. If, however, it were thought unnecessary or undesirable to impose further taxation on the traffic in shares-most of which, however, is of a purely gambling character and a very fair subject for taxation—the duty on completed transfers might be fixed at two cents per $100. At present the duty of ten cents covers on an average probably not less than ten transactions, so that, if this hazard is anywhere near the mark, the Government would still be a gainer even though the duty were fixed at the low rate mentioned, and the burden would be equally distributed over all the dealers in a particular parcel of shares instead of falling, as now, exclusively on the one who first sells after the last completed transfer. Under the present. system A, the registered proprietor of the shares, sells to B and pays the duty, B sells to C and pays no duty, C to D, and so on, the shares possibly passing through nearly the whole alphabet before they again fall COLOURED OPALS mounted in Plush, into the hands of a man who thinks it worth while to register himself as the proprietor. It would be more equitable, as well as more advantageous to the revenue, that the duty should fall equally on all through whose hands the shares pass. The some and artistic designs, suitable to all fastes duty on blank transfers it would be desirable veller expects everywhere. The captain and that in consideration of my mysterious "allie et to place at a high rate, irrespective of officers were very obliging, gave me a free revenue considerations, for the purpose of invitation to their table, and assisted me in wherewith a prepared asses considerable de discouraging the use of this class of instrument. In this matter the policy adopted at Singapore might, we think, with advantage be followed in Hongkong as regards its general lines. The particular rate of duty to be charged is of course a detail to be decided by special considerations, but that it is desirable there should be a difference between the rate charged on blank transfers and completed instruments hardly admits of

LETTERS FROM THE INTERIOR

BY GUSTAY OBERG.

PARMOL. 17th November, 1891; That my first letter should be dated from this coast port will be a surprise to the editor, as neither time nor matter to make one up was expected on the passage through here. But Providence, acting at first through the medium of Pakhol carriers and latterly by the agency of the Franch Consul, ordained it otherwise. When I embarked at Hongkong on the Alwine I left everything European, in the shape of clothing and food, behind, and as a genuine Celestial took a passage at $6, table and steward's in to learn who the foreigner was that fees included, and thanks to heavy opposition come with arms and implements of war to start the compradore's department furnished us not a rebellion. These men took passession of the house, and while the interview lasted stopped the circulation of other visitors.

The Consul entered, explaining that he came as an old friend of mine to offer me assistance if I required it, but at the same time that he felt himself in duty bound to inquire into my projects, my appearance in Pakhoi in the disguise of a Chinaman having an air of mystery about it. He said he wished the conversation carried on in Franch as nobody present understood that language. I thanked him, but declined his offers, declaring that travelling in disguise as a Chinaman was the only practicable mode of proceeding in the interior, and informed him that I had tried to engage bearers to Nan-ning-fu, whither I was bound, that the ob ject of my voyage was not antagonistic to any interest of his Government, but declined to tell him what my business at Nan-ning was He then assumed a threatening tone and to avoid possible complications I bastened to produce my passport, which his interpreter found in order, and then I terminated the interview by asking if he would put his visit on record adfressing me in writing, to which I would faithfully reply. He then departed with his mon, the burly officer of the soldiers hever leaving the door of my room until ordered to do so by the interpreter. After the Consul had left, a great of four soldiers in uniform was placed in the house, and on my inquiring for their superior this officer came and courtequaly explained that he had placed the guard there for my safety, letting out at the same time that he was under the impression that I was a French enbject and that he was the superior of the Mr. Chi Young Tam who officered the squad that accompanied the Consul on his visit. During the afternoon a number of inquisitive people dropped (pronouncing the name distinctly) had been let out at Shanghai and was now in the house.
